“Think Tanks Matter” Go To Launches Celebrate Think Tanks around the World

The Think Tanks and Civil Societies Program and 107 think tanks, intergovernmental organizations and academic institutions around the world launched the 2015 Global Go To Think Tank Index in a coordinated set of events on January 27 and 28, 2016. Our Global Partners in over 70 cities and 60 countries hosted and organized panel discussions on the subject of "Why Think Tanks Matter" (this year's theme). The program reached large audiences through on-line chats, blogs, live streaming, program videos, and tweeting. Provided below are some of the highlights of the events.

COVERAGE HIGHLIGHTS

- Russia-Direct.org: "Why even the best Russian Think Tanks Struggle to Influence Foreign Policy"

<http://www.russia-direct.org/analysis/why-even-best-russian-think-tanks-struggle-influence-foreign-policy>

Russia-Direct.org covered Russian think tanks' roles in the rankings. The article reported that 24 American think tanks and 3 Russian think tanks were included in the list of the best think tanks worldwide (US- and non-US.) However, some Russian think tanks fared well in other categories: this year, 12 Russian think tanks ranked in the best think tanks in Central and Eastern Europe. The important crux of the article was its analysis of the conflict between think tanks and the Russian government. As Carnegie Moscow Center Director explained, "... the authorities in Russia are very closed and reluctant to rely on any expertise outside governmental agencies." In the context of Russian think tanks' low rankings on the Index, Trenin discusses the tension between Russian think tanks and the government.
